CHICAGO, May 27.—The funeral of Dr. P.
H. Cronin yesterday was a notable affair.
From one end of the procession to the procession to the suppose of the procession of a friend purchased a bottle of Acker's English Remedy for coughs, and after taking it according to directions was completely cured. I therefore cheerfully recommend it.

I was suffering from an unusually bad cough, my lungs were sore and congested, and I consulted one of the best physicians in Helena, whose prescriptions failed to relieve me. I became alarmed, and at the suggestion of a friend purchased a bottle of Acker's English Remedy for coughs, and after taking it according to directions was completely cured. I therefore cheerfully recommend it. HELENA, Oct. 7, 1887.

The corpse had been lying in the Armory on the Lake front, and there early in the morning a curious and morbid. morning a curious and morbid crowd with the dead man's friends made their pilgrim-

Itching piles are known by moisture like age. The armed sentries from the Hiber. perspiration, producing a very disagreeage. The armed sentries from the Hibernian Rifles stood with arms at rest at each corner of the raised platform on which reposed the catafaique and coffin. A crayon portrait of the dead mandraped in black stood near the coffin. A huge cross of white violets and marguerites woven in with smalax was at the side of the bier and a harp and smailer cross stood at the foot of a candelabra with seven tapers which nickered in front of a cross. Ropes of green smilax and white roses were looped from the coffin and about the catafaique and potted plants were grouped at the corners of the platform. A canopy of American flags hung above the bier and festons of black and white were twined around the bars above it. A large crowd jammed the street before the armory, and the police kept a passage way opened for those who wished to enter the funeral hall. For three hours the procession in double file marched across the platform. Only a picture and a big silver plate on the coffin lid testified that all that was mortal of the deceased was within the casket. At last the procession stopped and the pall bearers entered. At their head was Luke Dilion, of Philadelphia: Ward O'Meagher Condon, of New York; John Devay, of New York, and Thomas P. White, of Detroit. Following them came a large number of locally prominent frish-Americans representing mends of the dead man and societies to which he belonged On leaving the armory the casket was placed in the heatse and the procession formed. At the head was a platoon of police, followed by the marshal and aides. Then came a drum corps and the Hibernian Rifles with arms reversed, and next the hearse with its guard of honor, the pall bearers, the Clanna-Gael Guards, uniform and of Prisa Picturing please of the dead man and societies to which he belonged on leaving the armory the casket was placed in the heater and the procession formed. Then came a drum corps and the Hibernian Rifles with arms reversed, and next the hearse with its guard of honor, the pail bearers, the Clan-na-Gael Guards, uniform rank of Royal Arcanum, and thousands of members of the Ancient Order of United Workmen came next; the Ancient Order of Hibernians, 1,000 strong; several courts of Independent Order of Foresters, 1,000 in number, and 1,700 Catholic Foresters were in line. Uniformed members of the Royal League, Sheridan Rifles, Catholic benevolent associations and fragments of other orders swelled the line. Marshall Cahill said that over 7,000 men were in the procession. Four bands and half a dozen drum corps played dirges or marked the slow time of a funeral march. Scores of flags draped with black and society banners edged with crape were carried by the standard bearers. The line of march was blocked with people on the sidewalks. Windows and stairways were crowded and roof tops covered.

On reaching the cathedral of the Holy Name an immense crowd was encountered. On the approach of the procession the bell tolled and the organ pealed forth a funeral land of the Holy Name an immense crowd was encountered.

march. The pall bearers with their burden moved up the center aisle and toward the casket on the catafalque. Candles of the funeral service were placed beside it and the ceremonies of high requiem mass begun. The sermon was by Rev. Father Muldoon. He spoke at length of Cronin's kindness of heart and generous nature, but approached no nearer the tragedy than a few general allusions.

After the church services the procession was re-formed, and proceeded through the crowded streets to the Union depot. At Canal and Adams streets thirty-six cars were filled, and hundreds of persons drove out in buggies and carriages, and hundreds of more came to the cemetery from neighbor-
